Did You Know: Many animal toys contain high lead levels

By Jonathan Gale, founder; DirectComplaint.com

Over the past few months the federal government has been testing many of the commonly used play toys that dogs and cats love to play with. Many animal toys contain lead levels that far exceed the allowable federal standards. It's frightening but the lead levels in many of the toys are so high, they could pose a real health problem to your favorite pet.

The most commonly used chew toys have the most lead. Even the rawhide bones that dogs love so much have been found to contain high levels of lead. Kitty litter often contains high levels of lead as well and just think, how dangerous is that?

Unfortunately, the laws for lead in animal products are not very strong. If you want to help change things, visit my website, Directcomplaint.com and send a letter to your Senator or Congressmen by visiting the Government Complaint center.
